

Katrien Dreessen, Niels Hendriks, Selina Schepers and Andrea Wilkinson are all researchers of the research unit Inter-Actions (LUCA, School of Arts). They all work together on different participatory in projects in Genk (Belgium). Although participatory design is the connecting glue, they each focus on different aspects (i.e. long-term participation; children's participation; PD with people with dementia; designing for one). Katrien Dreessen almost finalised her PhD research on long-term participation of non-expert users in open spaces (e.g. living labs and fablabs). Niels Hendriks finished his PhD research on involving people with dementia in PD projects. Selina Schepers is currently conducting her PhD on the design of methods, tools and techniques for participatory design processes involving children. Andrea Wilkinson is also nearing the last hurdle of finishing her PhD research on the implications of designing for one on both the design educator as well as the designer.
